

Being a teacher, we see that only one type of Tag can be chosen, but the reality is that a teacher could choose to teach classes for "Children" and choose "Grammar, Writing and Speaking", and not just one Tag as is the case now. Well, we think that the ideal would be to choose three tags per Class Category, three at most. And...

It is not well integrated; the menu does not display the same and the selection tab is not the same.

Although we use "Stripe" for the user it is not at all clear that this option is for paying by credit card, we have done tests, and people see "Stripe", think... "I don't have Stripe, I want to pay by credit card" and they cancel the reservation. We must make it clear that Stripe = pay by credit card. The competition has it that way:

As a teacher I should receive some message to my email with the approval or denial of the request to collect my money. I know it appears in the teacher's profile, but I don't trust too much that everyone looks there.

The request payment button disappears when you request a payment, when does it reappear? If the payment is denied, and after addressing the issue, LanguageLad approves the payment, how would the button become active again?

If we allow teachers to choose to charge their classes by PayPal or Stripe, they should be able to add their account information so that we can do so, right? If not, how are we going to pay them?

What is this button for?
